

The Daily Oregonian.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 18, 1881.

THE CUNNING SELLER OF ST. LAMBERT.

There is no doubt that the contents of Le Journal will be the most popular ever taken in the United States. The education of facts and names will be enormous, volume and the work of writing is doubtless will last the reader for years. The general public, however, will never know all that the review will embrace, as not even the newspapers which are supposed to give to the world the most information for the smallest price will be able to publish a summary of the papers before the close of the decade and the next enumeration. The collection of statistics in regard to educational interests was confined to a special agent and is being most thoroughly done. The mass of information which is being gathered by this agency will show the location of every school building, the grade of it, its capacity and every special feature connected with it, such as oratories and caskets, whether instruction is given in the rudiments of political science, with special reference to the character and the workings of the government and institutions of the United States and the privileges and obligations of citizenship. The character of the text books used will be minutely described, and at an attempt made to show the extent of the various exchanges made in their use. The construction and appointments of school buildings and surroundings with a view to their hygienic conditions and their most obvious defects will be investigated. An enquiry will be made of the number of schools in which instructions are given in the principles of domestic economy, care of the sick, or in other studies specially preparing them for householding and the care of children. The number of school houses and school days are to be noted; also of school libraries, and those schools in which astronomical and philosophical instruments are used, and to what extent. The equation of school numbers will also be frequently reported. The sources of income, whether from appropriations, taxation, private funds, donations, or tuition fees, will be elaborated, and the manner of the expenditure of school monies indicated, and all so clearly and in such detail as will place before the people of the country the financial history of the school system. The interest and importance of such a work to the people of the United States will be very great. Statistics derive their value from their completeness and when all the varied information gathered in every part of the union shall be published an intelligent opinion of the worth of this peculiar American institution can be formed. The census department, in this work should receive the hearty co-operation of every one who feels an interest in the educational affairs of the nation, in order that these statistics may have all the completeness and value which their importance demands.

The public has been assured that the tenth census of the United States will undoubtedly prove the most thorough in the history of the country, and will demonstrate the wisdom of congress in taking the work out of the hands of the United States marshals and placing it directly under the superintendence of persons. The house of representatives passed a bill in 1861 providing for the taking of the national census in the same methods as the tenth, but the senate, who always moves slowly, and which is nothing if not conservative, could not sanction so radical a change, and the measure had to wait ten years for its improvement in the census laws.

AN INTERNATIONAL MONEY FAIR.

In the Congress of the United States a year or two ago, the silver question was the subject of protracted and voluminous debate. Congressmen and newspaper editors of those who opposed their views in full measure and public meetings clamored for a change in the dollar of the fathers. But for some time past the same question in a little different form has been pending before a commission made up of members from various leading commercial nations, and beyond an occasional reference to it in the newspapers, the matter attracted but little attention in the world. The reason of this indifference to the proceedings of the bimetallic conference now in session at Paris is truly stated to be, in the first place, there is no demand for a double standard in this country, and further that we now have business men and others who, having given this question experienced thought, assert that the monetary supply in the United States is ample to meet all the requirements of our commerce, and that the cry for more money comes from those who do not make a proper distinction between the quantity and quality of the money in the country. Moreover, as the Philadelphia Times remarks on this subject, the cause of a double standard is injured in the minds of the business community because its loudest advocates are men who have been railing on the government for paper money without limit, and that the cry for more money comes from those who do not make a proper distinction between the latter, fearing that a charge of fraud and embezzlement might be brought against him, to escape the disgrace of which he ordered his son to hang him. The son in obedience did as command and has now been sentenced by the court of justice to 10 years and 6 months imprisonment.

This St. Paul Post-Press makes the following head: Postmaster James is setting out the star route work for Attorney General McVeagh, who is putting it in a neat shape for trial. A laborer was found guilty of having hung his own father in obedience to the order of the republican party and to the great pain of the republican party and to the great pain of the latter, fearing that a charge of fraud and embezzlement might be brought against him, to escape the disgrace of which he ordered his son to hang him. The son in obedience did as command and has now been sentenced by the court of justice to 10 years and 6 months imprisonment.
